Announcements

- Why large video game studios avoid Blender.
  - Note : Only the large ones tend to, and not all of them (Blender dominates among indies).
  - Addition : For large companies, the cost of adopting expensive tools such as the Autodesk suite is marginal compared to their revenues, so they are happy to pay a bit extra and get support. Indies and smaller companies are much more impacted by ongoing costs, so Blender makes much more sense for them.
- Microsoft Flight Sim (I think) achieves significant performance improvements by switching from geometry-based detailing to texture-based / material-based detailing.
- Inspiration for the day : Low-Poly style is taking over.
- How to make money as an indie artist? Brent Lattery and I have the discussion. (follow at your own peril).
  - (1) Find a popular, trending IP
  - (2) Create fanart / fangames (reskin something). Edginess and erotica provide bonus virality.
  - (3) Post it far-and-wide (X, BlueSky, DeviantArt, Artstation, etc).
  - (4) Gain followers. Obey Cease-and-desists. Move on to next trendy IP.
  - (5) Once semi-popular, open a patreon (make money) and mix in your own IP to start making bank
